
Democrat photo by Ken Galbreaith

THE WEATHERFORD POST OFFICE may be on its way to receiving a historic marker.

Group wants historic marker put on post office building

Another building in Weatherford may soon become an official part of Parker County history.

The Parker County Historical Commission has received permission from the United States Postal Service to initiate the steps required to secure and place a Texas Historical Marker on the post office building, erected in 1914, on Fort Worth Street.

The commission members feel the 73-year-old building will become an added tourist attraction for Weatherford and they hope to retain it as a part of Parker County history.

Work has already begun to secure data necessary for the marker, according to Mary Kemp, secretary for the PCHC.

Once the data has been collected, an application for the marker must be sent to the Texas Historical Commission.

Obtaining the documentation and doing the needed research "is not a small job, but the type our members really enjoy doing." Kemp said. "We want it (the building) to be here for a long, long time."